

LEXICON PHILOSOPHICUM

International Journal for the History of Texts and Ideas

Lexicon Philosophicum*: A new online journal edited by the Istituto per il Lessico Intellettuale Europeo e Storia delle Idee (ILIESI-CNR), Roma

The ILIESI-CNR launches a new editorial initiative, the online journal Lexicon Philosophicum, which is the result of a previous experience and a new opportunity. Since 1985 the institute has published under the same title Lexicon Philosophicum twelve volumes in the form of ‘notebooks’ (Quaderni), which appeared in the series “Lessico Intellettuale Europeo” of the Olschki publishing house. The initial editors were Antonio Lamarra and Lidia Procesi, followed by Antonio Lamarra and Roberto Palaia. These volumes were miscellaneous books mostly oriented to the outcome of research and studies developed within the institute. Their focus was the history of philosophical terminology as a privileged access to the history of ideas. Now, on the occasion of the participation in the newly launched European project Agora: Scholarly Open Access Research in European Philosophy, we have decided to transform this series of volumes into an international online journal, semantically linked to the textual archives of the ILIESI’s portal Daphnet.

Lexicon Philosophicum is a peer-reviewed, open access journal, with an interdisciplinary character. It aims at contributing critical essays, short articles, text editions, and critical bibliographical reports on intellectual history by focussing on philosophical and scientific texts. Particular attention will be devoted to technical and specialised terminology, lexica, and translations. A specific section will be open to contributions in the field of Digital Humanities (such as digital scholarly editions, corpora creation, semantic web research).

The Journal will be online by September, 30th 2011. The first call for papers is available here

THE 2012 AND 2013 ISSUES OF LEXICON PHILOSOPHICUM

Lexicon Philosophicum is established within the framework of the European project Agora, which aims at bringing to the philosophical community new modes of peer-reviewing. Submissions for the 2012 and 2013 issues of the journal will go through a double-blind peer review process and through a one-month open reviewing phase, during which registered users of the journal platform will comment on and discuss selected and peer reviewed papers. These comments will be considered by the editors, when taking their final decision, and by the authors when revising their final submission.
